

ABSTRACT:

An electroluminescent device comprises a pattern-wise ink-jet printed electrode. The electrode supplies charges to an electroluminescent layer of the electroluminescent device and comprises a metal or a metal alloy. In a method of manufacturing such an electroluminescent device, the electrode is formed by ink-jet printing molten metal or metal alloy.

Fig. 1